

MANAGING YOUR ALL PROGRAMS LIST

Beginners' Kaffee Klatch
Presented by Bill Wilkinson
August 30, 2008

When you go to your All Programs list (click on Start, then All Programs), does it tend to take up your whole screen with multiple columns? Is there any way you can make them into a single list?

You didn't have this problem with Windows 98 or ME, because they both showed all your programs in a list form, but with Windows XP, it is much different. Here is a remedy that will take you back to the list format, should you want to use it.

1. Right click your Start button and choose Properties.
2. Select the Start Menu tab and then, next to the Start Menu radio button, click the Customize button.
3. Next, click the Advanced tab and scroll down to the box marked Scroll Programs and check it.
4. Hit OK and then OK again.

So, from now on, when you go to Start, All Programs, you'll get a long list instead of column after column of programs that take up your whole computer screen.